

Hilfswillige

(in German, "volunteer helpers"), Soviet civilians and prisoners of war employed by the German army to do lower-level jobs. "Hiwis" worked as individuals or as groups attached to German military units. Later, their job description expanded to include guarding military objects.